Introduction

Thank you for using the Metro Construction Salvage and Recycling Toolkit to help maximize the recovery of leftover building or remodeling materials at your job site. This guide is also available at www.oregonmetro.gov/toolkit.

Waste reduction – keeping valuable materials out of the landfill – is good for business and great for the environment. Metro has developed this guide to help contractors, developers, architects and property owners in the Portland, Ore., metropolitan region save money and conserve natural resources by reusing and recycling construction and demolition debris.

The recycling industry is continually changing, which means that the information in this guide may change as well. Always call ahead to confirm a recycler's hours and accepted materials. In addition, Metro provides resources to help you stay current regarding available recyclers and their contact information, fees, pickup or delivery options and scope of accepted materials. For updates on recyclers or options for specific materials, call Metro Recycling Information at 503-234-3000 or visit www.oregonmetro.gov/toolkit.

Start Smart guide is a how-to guide on earning LEED salvage and recycling points from the U.S. Green Building Council. Call Metro Recycling Information at 503-234-3000 or visit www.oregonmetro.gov/startsmart for copies.

Tips on using this guide

Use this guide to find a recycler near your job site for the materials you want recycled. If you already know the name of the recycling facility you want to use, simply refer to the alphabetical listings in Appendix A (page 107).

You also can use the interactive directory at www.oregonmetro.gov/toolkit to find the recycler closest to your job site and look at a map of the recycler's location.

Can't find a recycler for a specific material? It may not be recyclable. Check with Metro Recycling Information at 503-234-3000.

Strategy for salvaging and recycling

1. Deconstruct and salvage

When demolishing part or all of a building, first deconstruct it to remove salvageable items as early in the project as possible. Deconstruction – feasible in most wood-frame and some metal-frame buildings – involves disassembling the structure in reverse order of assembly to harvest the materials. Salvaging entails removing the reusable building materials before demolition. See “Salvaged and used building materials” (page 75) for a list of salvage and deconstruction contractors and retailers.

Benefits: Can generate revenue from the resale of materials; qualify for tax credits; provide building materials that can be used in a new structure.

2. Separate

Separate your different debris types, grouping similar materials into categories such as “wood,” “drywall,” “metal” and the like. Start by identifying three or four materials that you will have the most of and that will require the least labor to separate. Keep these materials in separate loads.

Benefits: Dumping fees for separated recyclable materials usually are lower than those for mixed materials. Options abound, with more than 100 facilities in the region accepting different separated construction and demolition materials.

3. Combine in one container if opting not to separate

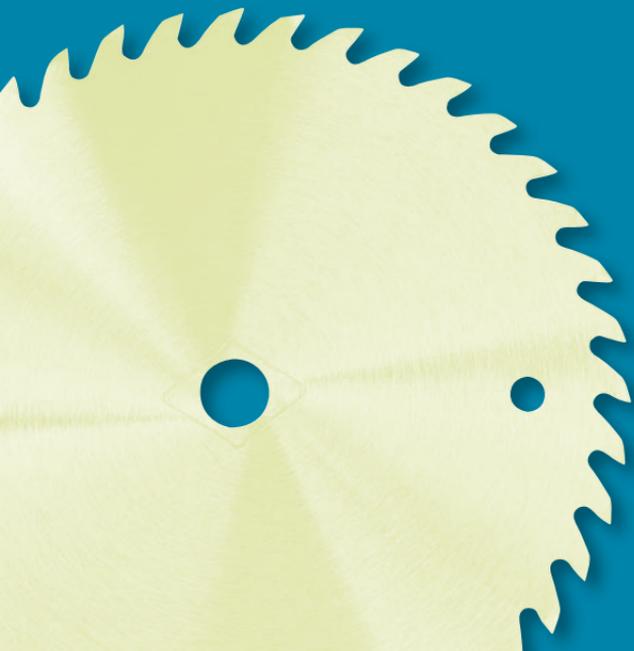

Put all construction and demolition debris into one container or load. Facilities that accept mixed construction debris sort these mixed loads to recycle anything with value and dispose of the rest. For health reasons, food waste/lunch waste is prohibited from mixed loads bound for mixed construction debris recyclers. See (page 47) to find a facility close to your job site.

Benefits: Requires little or no additional sorting at the job site. Great for small jobs like a bathroom remodel or jobs with limited space for multiple drop boxes.

Throw it all away? Not anymore.

On Jan. 1, 2009, local dry waste landfills stopped the practice of directly landfilling mixed construction debris. This change greatly increases recycling and is good for the environment. Instead of ending up in the landfill, mixed construction debris can now be dropped off at one of the many material recovery facilities (page 47) where debris is sorted for recycling.

About Metro

Clean air and clean water do not stop at city limits or county lines. Neither does the need for jobs, a thriving economy, and sustainable transportation and living choices for people and businesses in the region. Voters have asked Metro to help with the challenges and opportunities that affect the 25 cities and three counties in the Portland metropolitan area.

A regional approach simply makes sense when it comes to providing services, operating venues and making decisions about how the region grows. Metro works with communities to support a resilient economy, keep nature close by and respond to a changing climate. Together we're making a great place, now and for generations to come.
