

Tigard and Tualatin Fanno Creek Greenway Trail

This 1.4-mile (one-way) walk along the Fanno Creek Greenway Trail traverses three towns and 200 acres of greenspace including Tigard's Cook Park, Durham's City Park and Tualatin's Tualatin Community Park, as well as land owned by Clean Water Services. Creek and river crossings, wetlands, ponds and an oak savannah are some of the highlights.

Begin at SW Durham Road and Hall Boulevard. Hall changes name to 85th Avenue south of Durham Road. Walk south on 85th Avenue 2,000 feet to the trail entrance across from the Clean Water Services office. Follow the trail through a former pasture for dairy cows to Cook Park's east parking lot. From the parking lot, continue on a concrete trail through the Tupling Butterfly Garden in Cook Park. Opened in 2004 adjacent to Tualatin River wetlands, the garden honors Kristine Ann Tupling, whose donation funded the flowering landscape, walkways and viewing gazebo here.

From the garden, follow a pathway along the Tualatin River to a railroad trestle. Pass under the trestle on a trail that leads into Durham City Park. Turn right and walk across the Ki-a-kuts Bicycle and Pedestrian Bridge over the river. Once across, follow the trail through the river floodplain into Tualatin Community Park.

Retrace your steps to the start or follow Tualatin Road south to Boones Ferry Road. Turn left and walk two blocks to the bus stop at Martinazzi Avenue.

Parks on the Tualatin River

Cook Park's 79 acres along the Tualatin River offer classic park facilities: ball fields, horseshoe pits, a fishing dock and picnic shelters. Here, every June is the Tigard Festival of Balloons, three days when hot air balloons color the skies above carnival rides, a fun run, barbecue contests and a craft fair.

Connected to Cook Park is Durham City Park, centered around the last winding bends of Fanno Creek before it joins the Tualatin River.

Across the Ki-a-kuts Bicycle and Pedestrian Bridge is Tualatin Community Park, 27 acres with a boat ramp, sports fields, ball courts, a playground and skatepark. The bridge is named for Ki-a-kuts, the last chief of the Atfalati Native Americans. The Atfalati, also called the Tuality, lived throughout the Tualatin River basin, from the river's origins west of Gaston to its confluence with the Willamette River.
